As I gazed up at my window, I observed a meandering gushing river. Something made me curious about it. I wondered if it could potentially be the start of an amazing adventure.

Esurely, I strolled across town to the peaceful peaceful and unoccupied boat yard. As I got my boat closer and closer to the river I only got more eager to embark on my new epic journey.

My first destination was a bustling city. The river peacefully gushed across across the urban city it was pretty busy but quiet. The heat was sweltering. I could feel my tanned skin steaming. It was almost unbearable I needed to get used to the weather heat. The sapphire blue sky cleared. The towering buildings and spectacular skyscrapers stood tall at the very top of the urban, city crowded, cramped city.

As dusk fell, I arrived at a vast, tangled, lush jungle. Before I set foot on the island I knew I had to get sleep. As the sun rose, I was already going for food out on the bank. Later in the day, I started to explore. I encountered some truly endangered species.

I glanced up at parrots with flamboyantly long tails, pelicans such as panthers and cheetahs. A whole variety of animals. The amount of wildlife and plants. The jungle was even more colorful, lush and lively as I could even imagine. There was any animal I could think of.

As I left beyond the jungle, the wind picked up, the mouth gaped wide and the sea came into sight. An abundance of lightning ear-splitting high lightning cast across the sky. Before I knew it I was still gazing up back at my window again. I thought as if I could still taste the sea water in my mouth.
